There is no disease with which our country is afflicted, which sweeps off annually so many victims as that fell destroyer of the human race,

CONSUMPTION.

It is estimated that nearly 175,000 die annually with this terrible disease. Consumption in its confirmed and incipient stages, Coughs, Asthma, and affections of the Throat, Chest and Lungs, (Croup) &c., form by far the most fatal class of disease known in our land.
Yet even these may be effectually cured by means of the simple, yet wonderful remedy that nature has furnished.

HOT SAND BATHS.—One of the most attractive therapeutical novelties for some time past in London—recently introduced from the continent—consists in the erection of establishments for administering hot sand baths as a remedy for rheumatism, recent cases of nervous disorders, affections of the kidneys, and all cases where heat is needed as the chief remedial agent. The advantages claimed in behalf of this method of treatment are, that it does not suppress respiration, like the hot water bath, but rather increases it, and does not interfere with the respiration after the manner of the steam bath or Turkish bath. It is found that the body can endure the influence of this kind of bath for a much longer time, and a much higher temperature can be applied.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 4, 1874.

THE PROPOSAL TO BLOCKADE A GREAT RIVER.

We publish elsewhere the remonstrances of the City Government of Bangor and the Board of Trade and Manufactures, against the granting of a charter for a railroad bridge across the Penobscot river near Bucksport; and while these bodies have but given expression to the sentiment of the communities most directly interested in preserving this great water highway free from obstruction, we cannot think that a Legislature of Maine will require no protest to restrain it from an act which would prove so damaging to the welfare of the State. Any proposal to bridge the navigable portion of an important river should be considered with the greatest caution, and such obstruction of the natural thoroughfares of the State should be permitted only where the interests to be subserved thereby greatly outweigh the advantages hampered or destroyed. And when it is proposed to throw a permanent obstruction across the largest river in the State, at a point where it would most seriously interfere with an amount of navigation exceeded at only one other port in New England, a Legislature should require the most convincing proof of the superior importance of such a structure, before granting authority involving such grave results as would follow the practical blockade of Maine's greatest water course.

While, as before intimated, we cannot believe that the present Legislature will seriously entertain this remarkable proposition to sacrifice important public interests for the benefit of an enterprise which as yet has no existence, it may not be amiss to refer to some of the bearings of the project. In the first place, this demand is not made by a railroad in full operation, ready with facts and figures of its business to prove the necessity for accommodation to its traffic but it is made by the projectors of a line upon which neither has a rail been laid nor a spade struck. If the line were to be commenced in the Spring it would be some time before a bridge would be needed, and there can be no good reason for granting a corporation such a power long in advance of any necessity for its exercise. Then again it is claimed by practical men that a bridge anywhere in the vicinity mentioned would involve such enormous cost as to render it highly improbable that the building thereof is seriously entertained, and if this charter is sought merely for effect, the interests at stake upon the free navigation of the river are too vast to be trifled with by buncombe legislation.

We have strongly sympathized from the outset with the people of the Eastern Counties in their desire for railway communication with the rest of the State, and are ready to encourage any reasonable measure for the accomplishment of their purpose. But the proposed obstruction of the Penobscot River is not only too great a sacrifice to ask of Bangor, but it is requiring the people of all the great section contiguous to this river to submit to a damaging blockade of their cheapest and most important line of communication; when the bridge proposed is entirely unnecessary. A line of railroad from Bucksport to this city with a bridge crossing here out of the way of navigation, is already in course of construction and will be finished before the Shore Line will have made much progress, thus affording all the facilities of a continuous connection with the trunk lines of the State, and the short deflection of travel required cannot for a moment be compared with the evils resulting from a bridge at the point specified. It has been and still is our belief that the interests of all would be best served by a line through Eastern Maine running directly to Bangor as its western terminus and although we failed to obtain the requisite vote for aid, our Eastern neighbors ought not to forget that a large majority of our citizens declared in favor of co operation, and that we have hoped at a future trial to obtain the necessary two-thirds in favor of granting the aid which would bring the line here. In view of these facts the bridge project should not be pressed in a spirit of retaliation upon Bangor since the business men of our city, whose interests would first suffer from such an obstruction of the river, have been strongly in favor of the most liberal policy towards our Eastern neighbors with reference to the Shore Line.

Our Legislature will hardly need to be reminded that the great question throughout the country to-day is that of cheap transportation, that the exactions of railway monopolies have produced a revolt among the producing classes unparalleled in the history of our politics, that in the struggle with corporate power the main reliance is the development of water communication, that, everywhere measures are advocated for the improvement of existing water facilities, and that the General Government is beset with powerful appeals for aid in opening great lines of water transportation, to free the productive interests of the country from their iron fetters. At such a time and in view of these facts it would be a strange thing for the Maine Legislature to grant to a prospective railroad the power to obstruct the most important navigable river of the State.

The necessity of passing a draw bridge at any point in the vicinity of Bucksport would prove a practical blockade of the navigation of the Penobscot. Any person at all familiar with the difficulties of river navigation and with the course of the Penobscot in that vicinity, will testify that the swift current and the sweep of eddies around the bend of the shore, would render it next to impossible to pass heavy, lumber-laden vessels through a draw without damage, and there would be many chances in favor of serious disaster. Masters and owners of vessels are not willing to incur such risks and the navigation which it is proposed to thus obstruct in this river comprised two thousand five hundred and sixty vessels loading at this port last year, with an average of twelve vessels per day to pass the draw each way, in the rushing currents of Bucksport Narrows. The value of this unimpeded water course, not only to Bangor, but to this whole section and indirectly to the whole State and the commerce of other States and nations, cannot be estimated, but the annual shipment from this port of an average of over two hundred millions of feet of lumber, with hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of the produce of this section should offer sufficient protest against the obstruction of this noble river.

We have noticed suggestions, which we are unwilling to credit and reluctant to discuss, to the effect that local prejudices and affiliations are to influence action upon a matter which involves the gravest public interests. It is claimed in some of the newspapers that the delegations from the extreme East will be influenced by pique towards Bangor, that members from the West will be governed by a desire to outbid Bangor for the trade of Eastern Maine, and that the large number who do not feel directly interested will leave Bangor to contend against odds for the unobstructed navigation of the Penobscot River. We should be sorry to believe that the Legislature of this State would take so narrow a view of a great public question. The great rivers of this State are the common highways of all the people, and legislation affecting them should be considered upon the broad grounds of public expediency. We believe that the present Legislature will desire to act for the best interests of the State of Maine, and that so acting it will refuse to authorize the unnecessary obstruction of a magnificent river.

It is gratifying to find the Treasury statement again showing a decrease in the public debt, owing to the increase in the public revenues. The receipts of internal revenue for January were a million and a quarter more than the corresponding month last year. Commissioner Douglass is now expecting the receipts for the year to overrun his estimate of one hundred millions.

It is rather funny to read, in Mr. Mansell B. Field's book of gossip about eminent men, about Mr. Chase, while Secretary of the Treasury, innocently trying to pass counterfeit fifty-cent notes upon a hack driver.

Nantucket sold, a few days ago, the last vessel she had in the whaling business. In 1841 she had not less than ninety-two vessels in this fishery, and New Bedford now has only twenty-four, of which not one quarter will be sent to sea. The decrease of nearly 7,000 tons in the New England shipping engaged in whaling, and the reduction of the whole fleet to 171 vessels, or one fourth the number employed in 1854, are striking evidences of the decline in what was once an important branch of our commercial industry. This result is to be directly ascribed to the development of the production of mineral oils.

INTEMPERANCE IN IRELAND. According to the Dublin correspondent of the New York Tablet, intemperance is on a rapid increase in that city. One of the county Judges in addressing a jury said that he had seen gentlemen—or men who called themselves gentlemen—so drunk in the jury box that he had been obliged to turn them out. He had often seen witnesses lying drunk on the tables, and in one case he had seen a jury in the jury box trying a question of life and death so drunk that they had to be discharged and the prisoner put back for trial.

REDISTRIBUTION OF THE CURRENCY.—The Boston Advertiser's Washington special says the Committee on Banking and Currency have appointed Messrs. Phelps and Mitchell a sub committee to prepare a bill to make immediately effective the law of 1870 redistricting the National Bank currency by taking twenty-five millions of circulation from the eastern banks and giving it to the States in the West and South, which have less than their quota. The law provides that the re-distribution shall take place when all of the fifty four millions of additional currency authorized by the same act shall have been taken up. The Comptroller construes this phrase to mean actually issued, instead of applied for. It will be some weeks before the last of the fifty four millions will be issued but even then the transfer of currency cannot be at once made, for the law appears to have been devised to facilitate delay. The Comptroller must make a requisition upon the banks for the amount each must give up. The banks are then allowed a year to comply with the requisition. If they fail, a sufficient quantity of their bonds must be sold to redeem the requisite amount of notes as fast as they come into the Treasury. It might be two or three years more before the amount wanted would come in, and all that time the West and South would have to wait for their fair share of bank facilities and circulation. The bill which Messrs Phelps and Mitchell are preparing will require the Comptroller to make the requisition at once, and will give the banks only thirty days to comply with it. In case a bank fails to do so, the United States depositories and sub-treasuries will be instructed to sort out all notes of such banks passing through their hands, and forward them to Washington, where they will be redeemed and cancelled, according to the provisions of the old law, by a sale of the bonds of the bank. A new circulation will then be issued at once on application from the new or old banks in the States entitled to the same. It is stated that the banks which must suffer a loss of circulation under this bill prefer to do so rather than see the currency inflated by a further issue of bank currency, as proposed in the bill of Representative Munroe. The movement on the part of the Banking and Currency Committee to make the redistribution law effective may be fairly characterized as "hedging." It is obvious that the Committee have not much confidence in the success of their free banking bill, for if that measure should pass, the West and South could get all the bank currency they had the capital to obtain, and the East could keep all that it has got.

An Augusta despatch to the N. Y. Tribune refers to the demoralization of the Democracy of this State as follows:

The adjourned meeting of the Democratic State Committee, soon to be held, is looked forward to with much interest by all concerned in political affairs. It is known that the recent rupture was only temporarily bridged over, and it is now understood that the Chairman, Samuel D. Leavitt of Eastport, is to resign and declare in favor of an entire abandonment of the Democratic organization. It is further alleged that he and others will join their political fortunes with the Republicans, but this is not yet admitted by those concerned. That the Committee will break up and that the old Bourbon element will be left alone to manage the party estate, is no longer a secret, or hardly a matter of speculation. Great efforts will be made by the different interests to control the Democratic press in the State, but it will probably divide up about equally. The majority of the newspapers already go for breaking up as soon as a third party starts, while the others urge that the breaking up is a necessary preliminary to the new movement.

In this State, as far as we can learn, the ladies who were elected to the School Boards are giving great satisfaction, and there can be no question that educated women have a peculiar tact in the administration, as they also have in the teaching, of schools. It is rather surprising, however, that such a determined opposition should be made to those ladies in Boston, which has been the home of nearly all radical reformers, and unusual interest will therefore attach to the decision of the Supreme Court.—Chicago Tribune

POLITICAL AND PERSONAL.

The New York Times insists that the bill extending legal tenders to four hundred millions violates one of the resolutions in the Republican platform of 1872.

A movement has been made in favor of having a State police in Vermont. It started with a Temperance convention in Franklin county, and is indorsed by some Republican papers.

It is stated that Senator Sherman of the Finance Committee denies that the inflationists have a majority in the Senate, and predicts when a vote is reached next week on the resolution directing the committee to report measures looking to resumption it will be carried by quite twelve majority.

The Toledo Blade says: "Since the Bourbon Democracy of this State took the reins into their own hands they have been putting the 'best foot foremost,' and no man who was not an open and avowed sympathizer with the rebels has been recognized as a suitable person for honorable distinction."

Although Senator Ferry, who leads the inflationists in the Senate, comes from Michigan, the Detroit Tribune, the leading journal of the State, makes the reassuring statement that there is not a single Michigan paper of influence which favors inflation, while "the dominant sentiment of the best business men of the State is emphatic in its opposition to that policy."

Perhaps there is something significant in this: A Cleveland, Ohio, paper says that "Wick, the defaulting Treasurer of Clarke county, was a Republican, elected by a Republican majority." But Mr. Wick is jailed up in the Penitentiary, where he ought to be. The Democratic Treasurers of Richland, Fairfield and Butler counties have also robbed their respective treasuries, just as Wick did. But where are they? Are any of these erring Democrats in the Penitentiary or likely to be? Obviously not."

A letter from Sidney, Australia, Dec. 20th, says that last week, Her Majesty's ship Dido returned here from a cruise, bringing as passenger a seamen, the sole survivor of the crew of the bark Plato The ship left here for China with coal some months ago, struck a reef north of New Caledonia, the crew escaping in one of the boats and making for Solomon's Island. On reaching their destination they were

by the natives. The mate shot himself rather than be tortured by the savages, and the survivor was spared from the superstitious belief that, as half a dozen arrows by which he was pierced had not touched a vital part, it would be unlucky to attack him again.

ONE MAN RESCUED.

Fortunately the Dido hearing of a white man being in captivity there, rescued him, and at the same time arrested three of the principal murderers, one of whom committed suicide by poisoning himself next night.

Near the close of the proceedings a resolution was adopted expressing in general terms sympathy with the Cuban Insurgents. The Convention adjourned with enthusiastic cheers for the nominees.

The New England Agricultural Society held its annual meeting in Boston to-day and re-elected its old officers as follows: President, Geo. B. Loring of Salem; Secretary, Hon. Daniel Needham of Groton; Treasurer, Geo. W. Riddle of Manchester, N. H. The number of Trustees from each New England State was increased from 0 to 11. By the report of the Treasurer it appears that the last annual fair held at Mystic Park, involved a loss of nearly $3000. The present balance in the hands of the Treasurer is $2,304. The meeting voted that as it was the purpose of the Society to have its fairs held in all of the States of New England, it is inexpedient to hold the next fair in Massachusetts. THE HEAVIEST SNOW STORM FOR YEARS —that's what everybody calls it—commenced early yesterday morning, and continues as we go to press. The fall of snow during the day was not unusually heavy, but towards six o'clock in the evening it came faster, and all night long, with unceasing vigor, the big flakes fell so thickly that a street lamp could hardly be seen twenty feet away. By three o'clock this morning not less than two feet of snow had fallen, and the high northeast gale which accompanied the storm had piled up huge drifts in every direction. Fortunately for road breakers, the snow is light; otherwise they would have a serious task, and even now it will be no light job to clear the streets and roads There's one consolation about it, Bangor is not the only place which the storm has visited, as will be seen by an inspection of our telegraph columns

THE TRAINS had a hard time of it on account of the storm yesterday. The night train from Boston arrived here two hours behind time in the morning, and the short trains were all more or less delayed during the day The Piscataquis train got in half an hour late, and the E. & N. A. train from St. John an hour and a half late. The Pullman train for Boston awaited the arrival of the latter, and would have gone out after it came, but unfortunately the snow plow got off the track near the engine house and at midnight had not been replaced. A large number of passengers from the Provinces who were bound West, waited half the night in the station, but most of them gave up the idea of going farther and came up town to the hotels The day train from Boston was four hours late at Augusta, and six and a half hours late at Newport, but, provided with powerful locomotives and a snow plow, kept pegging away at the drifts and arrived here about 3½ o'clock this morning.

BOARD OF TRADE AND MANUFACTURES.

ADJOURNED MEETING.

An adjourned meeting of the Bangor Board of Trade and Manufactures was held at the Northern Border office yesterday afternoon, with the President, R. S. Prescott, Esq., in the chair.

The committee—Messrs. Warren, Schwartz and Lord—appointed at the annual meeting, to nominate Standing Committees, made a report, which was accepted, and the committees were chosen as follows:—

On Relations of the Board to the City—Messrs. Lysander Strickland, R. S. Prescott and Llewellyn J. Morse.

On Statistics—Messrs. G. W. Merrill, J. S Wheelwright and Michael Schwartz.

On Trade—Messrs. J. C. White, Chas W. Roberts and James B. Fiske.

On Manufactures—Messrs. Thos. N. Egery, H. H. Fogg and Thomas Hersey.

On Shipbuilding—Messrs. David Bugbee, John Holyoke and D. R Stockwell.

On Transportation—Messrs. William Flowers, Charles Hayward and Joseph P. Bass.

The subject of establishing a manufactory of woolen hose in this city was discussed and approved, and Messrs. T. N. Egery, J. C. White and H. B. Williams were appointed a committee to confer with Mr. W. A. Rice, the gentleman who proposes to establish the mill, and report at the next meeting.

Mr. O. H. Ingalls was appointed to collect the annual dues from members of the Board—the annual assessments have been fixed at $5.

The Secretary read a remonstrance against granting a charter for the construction of a railroad bridge across the Penobscot river, at or near Bucksport, which he was instructed to prepare at the last meeting. It was approved, and the President and Secretary were instructed to sign and forward it to Mr. Morse [illegible] to the Legislature [illegible]:

To the Honorable, the Legislature of the State of Maine:—

The undersigned, by instruction of the Bangor Board of Trade and Manufactures, would hereby respectfully [illegible]

[illegible] a bill [illegible] for the construction of a railroad bridge over the Penobscot, at or near the village of Bucksport, to be used in connection with the projected Shore Line Railroad;

Second.—That, though warm friends to the building of said road, we can see no necessity for crossing the Penobscot river at that point, or near it, as there is now under process of construction a link in the same road connecting it with the general railroad system of the State at Bangor;

Third.—That, were there no other outlet than to cross the river, it would still be inexpedient to construct at that point a bridge, as the damage to the navigation and commerce of the river by such a structure, above and below, would be greater than all the advantages to be derived, not only from said bridge, but from the whole Shore Line Railroad itself, which the said bridge would accommodate;

Fourth.—That the free use of the Penobscot river, now as ever open to all the States and to all the commercial nations, is of inestimable value to the people and business of the whole State; and consequently any impediment to the full and unmolested use of it would be a detriment to the business and growth of the whole State, and not simply to that portion of our population residing and doing business along its course;

Fifth.—That so large a river as the Penobscot, open to all the States, as well as to the trade of other countries, and with a national fortification on its banks, must be treated and regarded to a great extent, as national property; and we suggest whether the State has the right to obstruct the free navigation of it, especially when such damage can be so easily avoided as by running the trains of the road to its legal and natural terminus at Bangor, where it connects by a bridge now in process of construction, with the entire railroad system of the country.

And in consideration of these facts, as well as many others of a similar nature, but too numerous for record in so brief a document, we, the undersigned, officers of the Bangor Board of Trade and Manufactures, by a unanimous vote of said body instructed so to do, would and do hereby respectfully remonstrate to your honorable body against the granting of any right by charter or otherwise, to any person or persons applying for the purpose, of damaging your remonstrants and our citizens and the public generally by the erection of a railroad bridge across our largest and most commercial river at or anywhere near the point contemplated by those asking of you this privilege.

All of which is most respectfully submitted By order of the Board of Trade and Manufactures.

(Signed) R S PRESCOTT, President.
B. F. TEFFT, Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT'S HORSES In a letter from Washington, "Burleigh" writes to the Boston Journal as follows concerning the President's horses and carriages

The fuss the papers make over the carriages and outfit of the President, all prepared one for the quite ordinary stud Gen. Grant keeps for his own use and that of his family The old stable of Buchanan's time is now partly a conservatory and partly a woodshed. Nearly a quarter of a mile away, on a new and yet uncultivated part of the public grounds—outside the Presidential Gardens—stands a low, brick edifice, somewhat castellated, and this is the Presidential stable. A coach of modern style, trimmed wholly in black, except the handles, with no ornament of any kind but "U S G." on the panels, is the state and family carriage of the Chief Magistrate. It would not be a fashionable coach for a New York snob. It would need but little change to turn it into a first class mourning carriage. A small, light driving wagon is the favorite for the President when he drives himself. To this is hitched a small black mare of marvelous speed that came from the State of Maine. The carriage horses are beauties. One of these is over sixteen hands high. He was picked up in a hack in this city, where he attracted no attention. He cost but $400. He could not now be purchased at any price A fine sum would be paid for a mate A pair of black ponies of great speed and grit, driven to a low basket wagon, with a rumble behind, is the favorite team of Miss Nellie Grant. The horse of mark in the stable is Cincinnatus, the old war horse of the President. This animal is a deep mahogany bay, slender and of wonderful symmetry. His life work is done. He is eighteen, a cripple, and will live in clover to the end of his days. A four year old colt of great size and speed completes the horse outfit of Gen. Grant.

THE ESCAPE OF HARRY GENET. Now that Henry W. Genet and his friends are probably safe in South America, a man well acquainted with the party, and who at the time was in the secret, has furnished the following facts regarding their escape: On Monday morning, Dec. 22, Genet entered a coach drawn by fleet horses, which had been kept in readiness near his house, and was driven rapidly to Pelham bridge. Here a fast yacht was in waiting, having on board Norton, Coman and Walsh. Sail was immediately hoisted, and the boat sped away to a three-masted schooner anchored near Communipaw. The clearance papers had been made out for the schooner to sail on Monday, Dec. 22, for St. Mary's river. The papers were afterwards changed for St. Mary's river and Rio Janeiro. The schooner sailed on Tuesday, the 23d, for South America. The vessel had been fitting up for three months for Prince Harry and his friends, and the first day was passed on board, while waiting to sail, in a lively game of draw poker. It was the intention of Genet to sail on his old friend, Henry Meigs, the railroad king of South America, and after a few weeks, visit his brother in the Sandwich Islands.

The Graphic says that "On, Stanley, on!" were undoubtedly the last words of Livingstone.

To the Honorable Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court, now in session at Bangor, in and for the County of Penobscot

Hannah Martin of Diamont, in the County of Penobscot, wife of Aaron F. Martin, now of California, respectfully libels and gives this Honorable Court to be informed, that she was lawfully married to the said Martin at Detroit, in the County of Somerset, on the 25th day of June 1859, and has since had by him two children, now living, viz Mary Lizzie and George W.

That your libelant since their intermarriage has always behaved herself as a faithful, chaste and affectionate wife towards her said husband, but that the said Martin, wholly regardless of his marriage covenant and duty, has cruelly treated your libelant, has neglected to provide for the necessary wants of herself and children, has expended his money upon other women with whom he has been very intimate, and with whom, as your libelant has reason to believe, and does believe, he has had improper intercourse, whose names are to your libelant unknown, that on or about the month of November, A. D. 1873, he sold what of the household furniture he could, took all the money he could get together and left for California, leaving your libelant with her two children penniless, saying, as he left, "he should never come back to me again," since which time your libelant has been compelled to go out to work for her own support and that of her two children, and has received nothing from her said husband to aid her since his said desertion.

Wherefore the said libellant prays right and justice, and that she may be divorced from the bonds of matrimony between her and her said husband, and that the custody and education of her two children may be committed and entrusted to her

And as in duty bound will ever pray.

UNDER THE MOUNTAINS

(Concluded.)

Else came down from the pasture, Christian Ahrnem went about his farm, and no one as yet knew of any change in the two—it remained a secret between them, and there was another secret which they did not even share with each other—the sorrow from which each was suffering. "She is happy again now," Christian would say to himself with a sigh, all the while vigorously cutting away at the flowery grass as if he had no other thought in life. He will soon be betrothed to Anna Lenz,' mused Else. How little we know of the hearts even of our dearest!

What we Mother knew no more than the rest of the world. Christian had not been to the house i was true, but to her practical soul, day making was more important than love making any day. She was ill, too, and Else was glad to remain in the house and attend o her rather than risk a meeting with Christian. It would come before long, she knew the little village was too small for neighbors to avoid each other, and the poor have not the luxury of the rich—departure. Such an re never entered the young farmer's head. I do not even know whether to such Lome love gossips it would not have been even a fresh trouble instead of a relief at any rate, he would stay work when his time came de and be buried in the little churchyard with its wooden black crosses, covered with withered wreaths and set in the dst of quaint little box like flower beds.

One evening he had to speak about some farming business with Thomas Sturm, the grandson of old Wilhelm. The men hunt again a low wal in front of the inn, and looked down at the green water under their feet. The day had been hot and the evening was even mo sultry, yet the lake beneath its veil and every now and then a sudden pul of air came in their faces. Nothing could have been more full of beauty than the cloud forms which rested upon the top of the mountains softening without hiding the rosy gleams behind. There was a curious stillness in the air; not a little movement to the eye but sounds of distant rumblings and wailings as t some mighty power were drawing near. A tame goat bleating piteously, came and thrust its head loose upon Christian's hand the men hitting themselves wearily, looked over the lake, now stirred to its very depths and then at each other. For a few minutes neither spoke. It seemed as if the oppressive still ne s kept them silent, then a sweep of fresh air rushed across the water sudden and momentary.

It is the Fon,' said Thomas at last breaking the spell.

The Fon! A hot, sultry, furious hurricane coming up from the great African deserts, lashing the lake into fury battling with adverse currents, sweeping off every little obstacle in its way, slamming open doors, loose shutters tearing down the pretty bright flowe pots from the window sills, unrooting sheds sca tering everything far and wide—The people came running out from their doors in terror the kine, the Fon in every mouth the cu e was there. Heinrich Lenz the inn keeper all the women who were not up on the pastures running, shutting doors doing all they could against the sudden attack. The village was very like a great family and Christian, as the largest proprietor, was looked up to as a kind of head.

There was no sleep that night the Fon took care of that. The first blast blasts heard with no ea ing violence, people hurried about in the strange sultry darkness with a horrible opp ession weighing upon them.

When morning came they hoped that, as is frequently the case, the violence of the wind would moderate but the increasing light only seemed to make the havoc more apparent trees were torn up by the roots great branches of walnuts wrenched off and tossed in all directions other trees, tho as yet had resisted the destroying power were scorched and withered as if by fire, houses were unroofed shutters hanging loose, the new mown hay which lied far away from the meadows the white daturas orn, broken, discolored fierce leaping waves raging against the wild all the delicate pastoral beauty swept away by this awful re istible force. There was no time for thinking it out, no conquering it.

In the wild night the second night was not so confused as the first for though the causes for alarm remained, the people had become a little used to them. Some of the women stayed composedly in their houses a few even slept overpowered by fatigue and the dry, still heat but the greater part had taken refuge in the church and had gathered their children there.

How long will this last?' asked the priest of Thomas Sturm, when the morning light revealed in further work of destruction.

Only heaven knows, answered Thomas, shaking his head. I never have seen such a Fon.

If I be one shall be content if nothing worse comes,' said Christian, who had joined them.

Worse?

I am thinking of the stream. This wind will melt the snows.

The Cure was a brave man but he looked at Christian for a moment with the trouble of a new horror in his eyes. Thomas broke in—No! no! My father says the Fon melts too gently for that work and he knows its ways better than any man in the valley.

That is true.' Christian answered, yet I can not find rest about it.'

My father is sure to be right' said Thomas absentately.

Just then his youngest child, a golden haired round faced little girl, escaped from her mother, and came running to him, stretching out her little hands half crying, half triumphant in her struggle with the hurricane. He lifted her in his arms held her tight, and wrapped his coat round her. So the two remained. Her head against his breast, his arms clasping her.

Let us go and give a look at the streams,' said Christian.

It is no higher than I have seen it twenty times,' said Thomas, with a triumphant confidence in old Wilhelm's experience. He had little Marie's soft golden head pressed closely against him and was holding her tenderly.

I believe all is safe,' Christian, said turning away, and then with a sudden shout of horror, and a clutch at Thomas' arm—"Ah, dear heaven!' he cried, "look—look!'

For from the height where, on peaceful summer days, they could see the little innocent stream dancing downwards, a vast body of yellow water was coming, leaping, raging, spreading over the rock, hurling great trees before it, with a roar before which the Fon sank into insignificance. Swift and terrible this new enemy rushed upon the unconscious village for a moment its awful approach stunned Christian then with a cry from the very depths of his heart he sprung to meet it—it was like a terrible nightmare; he ran yet did not seem to move, his arms were stretched out, "Else! heart's beloved!' he cried in agony. There was the farm, he did not see it, he saw only the cottage with its closed windows. Quiet? ah!—the roar was in his ears—upon him, he saw the walls rock, gape, fall—one moment, and the awful enemy had him in his grasp, and was whirling him along unconscious, inert.

In the dim little church were the Cure and his small congregation, almost all the women a number of children, and a few old men.—The Cure who had just entered, was kneeling in prayer, the women were huddled together in little groups, many had been there all night, others had now come in, one girl among these latter knelt a little apart, her face buried in her hands. Suddenly it seemed as if the noise and fury outside increased tenfold, with it came the rush of water, and a shrill, terrible shriek, piercing the dull roar and the hearts of the listeners. The women started from their knees to the door; the Cure, who was there as soon as they, was the first to open it, standing so as to keep back the eager, terrified group. But they saw.

Some fell on their knees; others, shrieking wildly, "Frits!" "Thomas!" "Mother!" names at the same moment dearer than life, tried to rush out into the flood. It was all the priest could do to hold the door against them, and to force it back and bolt it. For, in spite of the church standing on its little hill, the yellow turbid water was there at his feet, and as the door opened, rushed in a little stream into the building. The women broke out into an agonized wail; Lisa Sturm dragged herself on her knees to the Cure: "Let me go, let me go," she sobbed; "I have Thomas out there," and then, looking round her wildly, "Ah, and my little Marie, too!"

Yes, poor mother. With her head on her father's breast.

Then a young girl pressed up against him frantically.

"I must be let out," she cried desperately, trying the lock. "I must, I must. I am Else Rothler, and my poor mother is ill in her bed I only came for one minute, because she would not rest unless I did. I hear her crying to me, 'Else, Else!' Oh, your reverence you were always good, to me—let me out!'

What could the poor priest do? The terrible pathos of those beseeching voices pierced his heart like a knife. He did the best he could. There, by the door, under which the little yellow stream of water was gurgling, he knelt down

'My children,' he said in a voice of unutterable compassion, "there is One who once stilled the hungry waves into a great calm—Let us pray to him.'

What a prayer! But it calmed them, as he expected those who had been frantic now only wept softly. Lisa Sturm saying over and over again, under her breath "My little Marie! my little Marie!'

The Fon had suddenly moderated, as if its work was finished the hot sun shone over head, the mountains, unmoved by the din and turmoil beneath, lay with the majestic light of heaven upon their faces, but here, in this little nest of homes, where but a short time ago it had seemed all sweet plentiful peace, what a contrast! No green meadows were left, here and there a little hillock just raised its crest above the yellow muddy waters a few trees remained to show where orchards had smiled, half a dozen houses were like the church itself, surrounded, but not destroyed everywhere else were gaunt, wooden ribs rising out of the water solitary gables, posts, bits of roofs, perhaps a broken balcony hanging to the side all round a terrible desolation a floating waste of woods, tree dead animals—what else? Everything was invested with a horrible, nameless dread.

The flood was not rising. It came toward them in waves, and was at least ten feet deep below the church, but whether a large out let had been forced into the lake, or from some other reason, it did not appear to grow higher.

If I only could get out,' sighed the Cure Then one of the old men crept out to them from the lower windows in a feeble, cracked voice of exultation A boat is coming. We are saved.

Despair changed to excitement, and every movement of the boat was proclaimed by eager women

It draws nearer!

Ah dear heaven! how slowly they row

Think of the current.

Where can they land?'

The boat came on—slowly. Some one stood up in it and waved, and a woman fell down on her knees in the water. It is Wal ther my Walther!" she cried, sobbing and laughing at once

Lisa Sturm said humbly, with a quiver in her voice which went to the Cure's heart "Will your reverence be good enough to tell me the moment you see our little Marie. My eyes are not what they were, and the child is such a little thing' and then she broke off and looked at him wistfully

Thomas is not there said old Wilhelm, shading his eyes with his hand, and shaking his head.

"I think he would not come in the first boat," she answered in the same pleading tone, "but the child—she is so little.'

The priest took her hand greatly touched "Lisa,' he said very quietly, 'sometimes our Father takes His little children from our arms into His.

For he had seen that little Marie was not in the boat.

The boat rowed up women rushed into the water and dragged it in with cries of joy—Who was there? Karl Franz Walther, Fritz Plater, Heinrich Lenz, two women, and two dark figures lying at the bottom of the boat. All the men were more or less injured, all looked solemn and awe stricken. In the midst of a torrent of questionings they kissed their wives or mothers without any outbreak of joy The Cure and the others went to lift out the dark figures.

Jammed in some woodwork, said Franz briefly

Johann Schmitt was taken out first—white, motionless with sodden clothes His wife was kneeling at the second.

He is dead some one said in a hushed voice, and no person contradicted it, but they carried their sad burden into the church and the priest directed them how to use certain simple remedies As he went back to the boat he met the second little procession—the second heavy, silent burden more ghastly than the last, from a deep, cruel cut across the head it was.

Who is it?' asked the priest, who could not recognize the face

Christian Ahrnem,' said Fritz to whom his mother was clinging rapturously

And then the Cure saw that here was at the head She had run out from the church and was in the boat before any one could stop her kissing the white, stained face in passionate silence, and as she would let no one take her place, the men had passed a coat under his head They all loved Christian and were very tender with him, but they shook their heads in answer to the Cure's questioning look. When they laid him down gently a whisper went round, and the good priest tried to draw the girl away, but she lifted her head and looked at them all resolutely

He is no dead, she said My mother is dead I know but God has given me back Christian.

Was it so, indeed?

They cut his hair and bound up the gaping wound The Cure made a fire at which to dry the men's wet clothes and then while the boat was gone to fetch another load they came a trying time of inaction When the boat returned, there were more joyful greetings, more questions of such as could, in their silent talk admit what had or had not been saved So far as they could tell four men were missing, Thomas Sturm among them, then there was little Marie and Else's mother, and the two lying within the church, and the heavy tale was told, it was, after all, only a wonder that so many had been saved from that terrible death Not long after there was a stir at the door Other boats appeared on the lake as the storm subsided some of them rowed about outside, trying to pick up those portions of the universal wreck which had been swept into the lake One at last dragged in a heavier burden, and which they rowed directly to the church This it was which caused the stir, this something—reverently covered, solemnly lifted out, brought into the church, with the Cure walking before it. Lisa Sturm rose from her knees and went to meet it pressing out her hand, and trembling violently Some one tried to stop her

Take off the cloth,' she said, in a hoarse, strained voice. That is Thomas'

At a sign from the priest the men obeyed Her instinct was true—there calm and still lay her husband, and there, too, clasped tight to his breast, lay little golden haired Marie That embrace had never been broken, that arms were around her, the fair little head pillowed against him when quick, sudden death came leaping down and riveted it. There was something so tender, so peaceful, so holy in the attitude, in the faces, that it hushed all mourning, the wail died away on the mother's lips, the priest crossed himself, and knelt down beside these still, passionless figures; Lisa glanced at him, trembled, then bent down and kissed each face—husband and child—covered the faces, and knelt down and so

About an hour afterward one of the boats came back with a doctor. First of all, the women who were watching brought him where Johann and Christian lay a little apart from each other They knew that Johann was gone beyond the reach of all skill, only his wife was away, and it seemed more fitting to these simple folk that the doctor should pay in pounds that which no more could be done by any of them. And then he turned to where Else still kept her faithful watch, with the yellow sunlight shining upon her hair, her head under the dear head, her eyes upon those closed eyes that had looked so sadly at her when last she met their gaze.

He is alive—that is all,' said the young doctor gravely After all he could not do much, and the women looked at little Else, poor child, and shook their heads as the minutes came and went, and brought no change. But the border land was not passed—there came a slight fluttering movement, a gasp, the doctor was at his head in a moment—another painful breath, then the wondering eyes opened and fixed themselves on Else, wandered away, returned; the lips parted "Heart's beloved,' breathed Christian in the faintest, feeblest sigh, her arms were around him, and the doctor, half-scolding, half-laughing, became peremptory at once.—From the Cornhill Magazine.
